Rejoicing Over the Col-lossal Success—Speeches by Gen. Butler and Gov. Dennison—Military Honors for Gen. Grant.

[Special Dispatch to the Chicago Tribune.]

WASHINGTON, April 10.

There is good authority for the statement that the rebel armies of the trans-Mississippi States are ready to follow the example set by Lee, and surrenderon or disbanded and gone home. Already propositions for surrender by Generals Kirby Smith and Magruder, of the Trans-Mississippi States have been received by Government for reconstruction on the basis of the abolition of slavery.

Up till 10 o'clock to-night no news has been received by the Government of the surrender of Johnston's army.

Telegraphic communication on the North Carolina Railroad have interrupted telegraphic communication between Lee's and Johnston's armies, and it may be some days before the receive official intelligence of the event.

[Special Dispatch to the Chicago Tribune.]

WASHINGTON, April 10.

Washington is dumbfounded with our great news of Lee's surrender and the early prospect of peace. The merchants have closed their places of business and the workmen and mechanics have left their shops and are marching through the streets with loads of music, banners and devices. Salutes are fired, and the wildest excitement prevails such as has never been witnessed here before. All the departments are closed and the clerks are participating in the general rejoicing. Several regular demonstrations have taken place, but the greatest excitement does not exist. It is manifested in most of the Executive Mansion during the morning. The President was serenaded with the Marine Band, and made a speech in keeping with the occasion, but one containing nothing new. It was a congratulatory speech, and was received with cheers. He said he had no speech to make, but congratulated the people on the occasion. He was followed by Secretary Stanton, who said he had no speech to make, but congratulated the people on the glorious news. He was followed by Secretary Seward, who said he had no speech to make, but congratulated the people on the glorious news. He was followed by Secretary Welles, who said he had no speech to make, but congratulated the people on the glorious news. He was followed by Secretary Usher, who said he had no speech to make, but congratulated the people on the glorious news. He was followed by Secretary Dennison, who said he had no speech to make, but congratulated the people on the glorious news. He was followed by Secretary Harlan, who said he had no speech to make, but congratulated the people on the glorious news. He was followed by Secretary Speed, who said he had no speech to make, but congratulated the people on the glorious news. He was followed by Secretary Blair, who said he had no speech to make, but congratulated the people on the glorious news. He was followed by Secretary Browning, who said he had no speech to make, but congratulated the people on the glorious news. He was followed by Secretary Hunter, who said he had no speech to make, but congratulated the people on the glorious news. He was followed by Secretary Fox

A DAY OF GREAT REJOICING.

"The war is closing—is virtually closed," such is the tenor of the dispatches which have flashed across the wires for the past few days, and the people, whose hearts were stirred to the utmost by the announcement that Richmond had fallen, have ever since then waited with bated breath for the returns which the surrender of Lee. How enthusiastically welcomed by our citizens, cannot be told in words; never till the great day upon which we shall be photographed on paper, will it be possible to give adequate expression to that intensity of exultant solicitude which filled each breast. The efforts of the people were strained to the utmost, and the delay of a few days seemed to them an excruciating agony in tens of thousands. Who shall tell the tale of those who sickened with hope deferred, till the tidings of victory should be received, and the knowledge that the end of the struggle was at hand, should have been given to the world? Many there were who should have been in the grave before the glad news reached us, but the knowledge that the long promised day of jubilee had come, would have been enough to call back the departing spirit, and to endow it with a new lease of life. Many there were who should have been in the hospitals, who would only be too glad to exchange the pain and misery which they were enduring for the privilege of joining in the general joy they had the good means to participate in.

BOARD OF TRADE.

The news on 'Change happened description. The members of the Board of Trade met in usual, and, as the hour of 10 o'clock drew near, the excitement increased. Suspense was in the heart of everybody who had a dollar invested in the war, and the fall of Richmond was the heart of everybody who had a dollar invested in the war, and the fall of Richmond was the signal for the realization of the hopes of twenty of anxious solicitude which filled each bosom. Many of the people were strained to the utmost, and the delay of a few days seemed to them an excruciating agony in tens of thousands. Who shall tell the tale of those who sickened with hope deferred, till the tidings of victory should be received, and the knowledge that the end of the struggle was at hand, should have been given to the world?
